PubMed Changes!!

You may have noticed that PubMed has a new look!! The National Library of Medicine unveiled a new version of PubMed in late 2009. The website offers online help and tutorials. Additionally, Burlew Medical Library has created a PowerPoint that is linked on our library website next to the PubMed link. This is also a great opportunity to remind you that in order to access all of the full text from Burlew Medical Library linked on PubMed, you need to access PUBMED only via the special link on our library website under "Research Databases":

If you would like more extensive training on utilizing PubMed contact the Medical Library to arrange a training session.

Blogs

Burlew Medical Library is now participating in an additional blog: <http://flatmaggiemagnet.blogspot.com>. "Flat Maggie's St. Joseph Hospital blog-the Magnet Journey" will highlight Magnet Maggie's adventures as she visits SJO departments and learns about our preparations for our Magnet re-certification. Feel free to pose a question or make a comment. The concept of "Flat Maggie" is based on the concept of "Flat Stanley" which has been widely used in the education arena. Flat Stanley is meant to facilitate letter-writing by schoolchildren to each other as they document their adventures with Flat Stanley. Of course, this blog is in addition to our blog devoted to evidence-based nursing/nursing research:

Both blogs are open to the public.
